and your quiet,
...its underbelly, its filament, its unzipped...
....just another space inside the dissolving...
...the day melding into our hurt its, our its, its like the grease that seeps through the bottom of a bag or these commas, how they stream after us, before us, in us...incubating, ready to separate like how the inside things become outside things with the snap, the quiver, the done. We've shared our last autumn, that's for certain.

How I see birds now. I see birds and stars like a hurt cartoon. And I count them for nothing. For you.
